Trench War on Somme Changes to Field Battle

"That our gallant allies should advance faster, with smaller losses, than we is not only the fortune of war, but may be called poetic justice, since they lost so heavily during the long weeks while we were getting ready to take our share in the great offensive.

"However, it must be clear now, even to laymen, that the blame heaped on us for not going to the aid of the French before Verdun was quite undeserved, as we are doing exactly what General Joffre requested. When he gave the word we sprang to the attack, in which we have suffered grievously, but which leads to no regret beyond sorrow for the fallen; for it is now our time to stand the brunt of the hattle.

"South of the Somme the Germans were completely surprised, and our allowed."

SHELLING SAME TOWN

"South of the Somme the Germans were completely surprised, and our allies will get through to the river without much loss. In that region you may look for immediate developments, as the fighting there is now in open field formation, the last of the enemy's works having been captured. A glance at the war map will show you that our allies are clear across the network of trenches.

"Further north you will note that, while our line is now beyond the first series of German defences, we are in immediate contact with strongly fortified places.

"We are well content to do our share in the great general Allied offensive, which already has proven that the winth already has proven that the winth already has proven that the initiative, so long in their hands, is now lost by the armies of the Central Powers."

Describing one of these facts of bravery, "The Daily Telegraph's" correspondent says:

"There was a German machine gunner at Boiselle, one of those who kept up a ire of bullets on our troops when we first made the assault on this position. To-day he was still in his emplacement, doing very deadly working his terrible little gun. Our mentook him prisoner and, in their English way, bore him no grudge, but sang his praises."

In contrast with this, the British are proceeding unusually cautiously. Even the War Office, instead of magnifying the early gains, is noteworthy
